Strength Training

Benefits of Strength training include:

Improve Power, speed, endurance in sport-specific movements
Improve endurance- perform better for longer.
Injury prevention
Improve Biomechanics
Great for bone density.
Boost mental health.

Specifically for a triathlon:

Maintain form when fatigued
Reduce knee, hip & shoulder issues
Increase power output.
Make transitions smoother and less exhausting

Progressive overload is the gradual increase of stressed placed on the body during exercise training. This is important for continual improvements in strength, endurance & overall fitness. We do this by increasing weight, repetitions, sets, increasing frequency over training and decreasing rest time. In your mapped program, we have done this for you.

With strength training, individuals will be at different levels. Please start with a lighter weight, once you become comfortable with the weight, please then progress to a heavier weight, this is progressive overloading. If any of these exercises are painful or aggravating, please reach out to us for an assessment.

Recovery Tips and Tricks

Hydrate

Maintaining good hydration helps reduce fatigue, speed recovery, and enhance performance. Regular intake of water and electrolytes supports faster recovery, stronger training sessions, and greater resilience during heavy training.

Stretch

Maintaining a regular stretching routine helps reduce muscle tightness, improve joint range, and lower injury risk. Consistent stretching supports balanced movement, better control, and safer training during heavy training.

Soak

Soaking in a warm magnesium bath can help ease tension, reduce stiffness, and relieve delayed onset muscle soreness after intense training sessions.
